FACULTY DEVELOPMENT CONFERENCE

Dr. Loraine Phillips, Associate Provost
Academic Effectiveness, Georgia Tech University

Dr. Phillips works with faculty and staff to lead institutional effectiveness and accountability efforts. She interprets policies and influences practices for the Institute to various constituents, including accreditors, the state, and the University System of Georgia. She works closely with faculty and staff in new program development and authentic assessment practices. Dr. Phillips served as the first elected chair of LEAP Texas, a voluntary coalition of over 60 Texas institutions, including over half of the community colleges and all six university systems in the State, with the common purpose of strengthening general education in Texas, assessing it authentically, and promoting high-impact practices within institutions across the State. Dr. Phillips earned her Bachelor degree from Indiana University and her Master's degree and Doctor of Philosophy degree from Texas A&M University, with an emphasis in literacy and higher education administration.
